CHINA'S AGRICULTURAL SECTOR

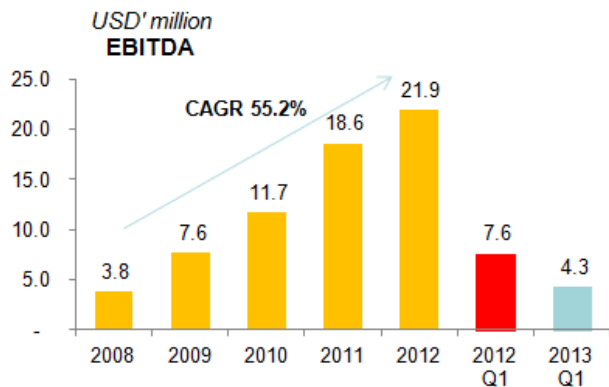

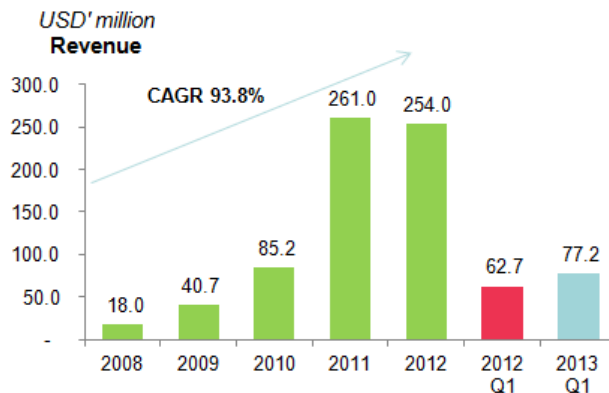

- China is the world's second leading consumer and producer of corn, second only to the United States
- Accounts for over 20% of the world's consumption of corn, with the nation's demand for corn increasing 7% annually
- Currently there is no nationally recognized grain brands -- at the same time, Chinese consumers are becoming increasingly health and nutrition conscious
- In particular, packaged and unpackaged grain food markets are rapidly developing
- The Chinese Nutrition Society recommends adults to consume 250-400 grams per day of processed grain foods, 50-100 grams per day of coarse and whole grain foods, and 30-50 grams per day of bean or bean-based products
- The potential market size of China's grain market is estimated to be over $100 billion
